SCULPTURE IN CONTEXT

2015

Sculpture in Context is thirty years old!

This September, the National Botanic Gardens has once again been transformed into a living art gallery.

Sculpture receives a spectacular presentation in the Garden, which is laid out in a variety of settings, winding through the 50 acres of landscaped grounds. As you weave your way through the garden, you will discover sculptures in the most unexpected and surprising places. Ranging in size and materials, these works of art represent the richly diverse character of Irish and International contemporary sculpture today.

Artists' ingenuity, contemporary art and Mother Nature are wonderfully combined here and as the seasons change from summer to autumn, visitors are given a reason to return again and again to see the sculptures and the garden in ever changing conditions.

2014 saw the addition of a major new award 'The New Ireland Assurance Sculpture Award'. Last years winning sculpture was 'The Family' by Blessing Sanyanga. This is one of the largest prizes for sculpture in Ireland.

Life size works and large installations are displayed throughout the gardens, ponds, Great Palm House and Curvilinear Range of glasshouses. Smaller pieces are exhibited in the gallery above the visitors' centre.
